

SA Artificial Intelligence community stimulated by AI blog

Contributed by Marc Ashton
Tuesday, 17 June 2008

South Africa has long had a proud tradition of cutting edge technology development. Industrial and commercial applications developed in SA have found their way into major markets across the globe. Artificial intelligence is fast becoming a high growth sector in the technology industry and South Africa has a small but growing niche community working in this field.

South Africa has long had a proud tradition of cutting edge technology development. Industrial and commercial applications developed in SA have found their way into major markets across the globe.

Artificial intelligence is fast becoming a high growth sector in the technology industry and South Africa has a small but growing niche community working in this field. In early 2008 the Artificial Intelligence blog (www.aiblog.iblog.co.za) was established to bring professionals in this field together to discuss potential applications for the technology.

A local university is already in the process of establishing its own AI user group and hopefully through interaction through this blog, professionals and industry specialists will be able to get together to bring this technology to market.

The AI Blog encourages all scientists and technology specialists around the globe to make use of this platform and to work together to turn ideas into reality. Should you have any interesting Artificial Intelligence related articles to be considered for publishing please e-mail our Newsdesk (newsdesk@rival.co.za)

About the AI Blog

The AI Blog (www.aiblog.iblog.co.za) was established as a platform to bring technology specialists together to discuss Artificial Intelligence related topics and applications and to allow for the exchange of ideas to better improve this niche market community.

Contact Information:

Marc Ashton

Tel: 082-561-1585

E-mail: marc@rival.co.za This email address is being protected from spam bots, you need Javascript enabled to view it

Web: www.aiblog.iblog.co.za